

GAMBLERS ARE HELD IN BIG BAIL

Sureties in $1,000 Each Qualify as Bondsmen for Phil Daly, Jr., Chase, Hill and Middleton.

JEROME'S AXE MAY SWING ONCE MORE.

He Says He Is Ready to Resume His War Until the Rattle of Chips Will Cease in a Rejuvenated Tenderloin.

The gamblers whose places were raided by District-Attorney Jerome last night were arraigned to-day in Justice Wyatt's court in Special Sessions. Bail was fixed at $1,000 each for Phil Daly, Jr.; George Chase, Eugene Hill and George Middleton. Peter De Lacey went on Middleton's and Daly's bond and John Smyth on Daly's two assistants.

That Phil Daly, Jr.'s, gambling house should be raided is the biggest surprise that has come to the men of the green table and the whirling ball for many a day. Situated at No. 107 West Forty-fifth street, next to the St. James Hotel, Daly has been immune from police interference for many years. And more than that, as the tip went out a few weeks ago that no place would be touched until after election, the gamblers felt fairly sure of themselves.

Gave Him Full Swing. The credit of the raid on the Daly house is due to Harry Fritchman, one of Inspector Walsh's plain clothes men. Commissioner Greene hearing that the gamblers expected immunity for the anti-election period, sent for Walsh and told him that something must be done in his district to break up all the big gambling houses. Walsh selected Fritchman, telling him he would have full sway and that all he desired was evidence to convict the biggest gamblers of them all.

There was no excitement, no hammers afoot or ladders were used in the raid conducted on Daly's place. The raiders found Daly in Burns's restaurant and he went with them to the house, ordering the men on the inside to open the doors. Two men were found inside, and they were arrested under the name of John and Richard Doe. One is said to be Zeiss, the manager, and the other a roulette expert.

The house is a five-story brown-stone structure, and is handsomely furnished. The woodwork is largely of mahogany, and the walls and ceilings are in white and gold. The gambling room of the house occupied most of the first floor. There is a one-story extension in the rear of the house, on to which open the windows of the second floor. The raiders found that a bridge ran from this roof to a lively stable which faces on Sixth avenue. An elevator in the rear of the lively stable led to the entrance to the bridge.

Three Faro Boxes. Although the house was searched from top to bottom the only gambling paraphernalia found were three faro case boxes.

The evidence was secured by Detective Harry Fritchman, of Inspector Walsh's staff. With a friend, who is also said to be a detective, he has spent many evenings in up-town restaurants and saloons during the last few weeks. They had plenty of money to spend, which will probably appear on the District-Attorney's expense account later on, and dressed in style.

On Saturday night, Fritchman says, he was approached by Daly, and at his suggestion went to the Forty-fifth street house and played roulette. They lost. Detectives always do, according to their expense account. Daly went away while they were playing, assuring the crowd that there was no danger of a raid.

The evidence was laid before Mr. Jerome yesterday afternoon. He waited until last night, and at almost 10 o'clock went to the home of Justice Wyatt and secured the necessary warrants. With his two assistants, Mr. Lord and Mr. Corrigan, and Inspector Walsh he spent the evening at the City Club until time for the raid, when he was joined by Capt. Handy and a squad of policemen.

Make Second Raid. Simultaneously with the raid on Daly's another was made by Capt. Burfield, of the Tenderloin, on the gambling-house of George Middleton, at No. 107 West Twenty-fifth street. The evidence for this raid was also secured by Policeman Fritchman and his friend. The two according to Fritchman, were approached by a stranger and taken to Middleton's, where a roulette wheel was rigged up for them. The detective says he lost there also.

The house run by Middleton is over a cafe. Capt. Burfield and a squad of his policemen went into the place through the cafe and broke open a door leading to the upper floor. After considerable searching the police found 400 chips and two roulette frames hidden between the ceiling of the fourth floor and the roof. They chopped their way through and got them.

Fritchman, the detective, and the Waldorf and made himself popular with the swimmers and plungers who frequent the cafe, grill and bar. He took away a big case of chips and a box of money. When all became the friend of young men, the money was always at hand.

Jerome's Hatchet Again. At any rate Fritchman had enough of evidence after that night to present his case to Justice Wyatt, who issued the warrant which resulted in the arrest of Daly and his crew. District-Attorney Jerome, who instituted the raid in fact, said to-day that he would now begin the tour of hatchet work, if necessary. He says he will be bound to break up all gambling in the Tenderloin, and he will not stop until every violator of the law is hanged or placed on the gallows.

When George Middleton came to headquarters to-day his brother, Henry, was there to see him. Henry was also under arrest. Harry Linger appeared for Middleton and District-Attorney O'Reilly for
